[The following graceful tribute to Lady Franklin is from the pon of Elizabeth H. Whittier, sister of the Quaker Fost of Amesbury.]

LADY FRANKLIN. Fold thy hands, thy work is over! Coolthy watching eyes with teats; Let thy poor heart, overwearied, Rest anks from hopes and fears.

Hopes, that saw with steepless vision, One sad picture fading slow; Fears that followed, vagus and nameless Lifting back the valls of snow. For thy brave one, for thy lost one, Triest heart of wamen, weep! Owning stiff the love that glanted Unto thy beloved sleep.

Not for him that hour of farror, Whou the long ice-battle o'er-in the sunless day his comrades Deathward trod the Folar shore.

Spared the cruel cold and famine, Spared the fainting heart's despair— What but that could morey grant him? What but that has been thy prayer?

Dear to thee that last memorial, From the cairs beside the sua; Evermore the month of roses Shall be surred time to thes! Sad it is, the mournful yes-tree O'er his simulers may not wave; Sad it is, the Euglish dalay May not blossom on his grave.

But his tomb shall storm and winter Shape and fashion year by year— Pile his mighty mansoleum Block by block, and tier on tier.

Guardian of its gleaming portal Shell his stainless honor be, While thy love, a sweet immortal, Hovers o'er the winterses! The Roman Legations.

Crossing the Italian peninsula near its centre, lie Papal States shoot up towards the north-west following the Adriatic Sea to the mouth of the Po, whence they proceed westward and form a block nearly square, each of its sides being from fifty to sixty miles in length, which is united with the main body of the Pontifical dominions by a sort of isthmus between the Apen-niaes and the sea, from eighteen to twenty-five miles broad. This geographical excrescence has on its western borders the state of Tuscany and Modens, whi le the little river Foglia sepa-OPEN THIS DAY, A LARGE rates it to the southward from that portion of the Papal States known as the March of Ancona. Its other limits are formed by the Adriatic and the Po. If the render comprehents this des-cription he wil he able to form a general idea of the outline and extent of that part of Northern lialy commonly but incorrectly termed the Ro-magna, and occasionally the Legations—a re gion which was revolutionized last summer, and which Napoleon declares has, by the "inexorable logic" of facts, been lost to the Pope for-ever. Let us add that it contains in all about 4,000 square miles, with a population slightly exceeding one million souls. Physically this region consists of two separate states, the larger, or square block referred to, forming part of the northern slope of the Apennines, while the narrow strip has an inclina-tion from these mountains lowerds the cast. The former belongs properly to Northern, the latter to Central Italy. But is both the geological formations and natural productions are pretty nearly alike. There are the same calcareous ridg-cs along the Tuscan border, the same alluvial plains at the opposite extremity, the same foam-ing streams, with channels grooved deeply into the uplands, and spreading out into dull sheets when approaching their mouths; there are also corresponding belts of country devoted to the culture of hemp, silk, precious fruits, and the nines, while the marrow strip has an inclina culture of hemp, silk, precious fruits, and the

Unlike Piedmont and Lombardy, the Lega tions do not afford a very marked contrast be tween the ancient and the modern, as if two or three civilizations were arranged side by side. They are stamped all over with Roman and mediaval impresses; the modern is scarcely visible. The Aemilian way, constructed more than twenty centuries ago, from Rimini (Ariminum) to Piacenza (Placentia), in many places still serves for a thoroughfare. Most of the cities along its route or contiguous to it were Roman colonies, several of them important points during the Empire. Ariminum was the hirst conquest of Cosar after crossing the Rubi-con. Revenue was for some centuries the capcon. Ravenna was for some centuries the captal of Italy. Ferli is a corruption of the words Forum Levi: The word Bologna is but slightly altered from the Bonomia of antiquity, and the place is, next to Rome, the richest Italian city in relics of the middle ages. Ferrara is not known to have struck its roots so desply into the past, but is fully up with its other neighbors in the career of declension, exhibiting the same rained fortifications, deserted mansions and grasscovered streets. Agriculture is conducted without skill or enterprise; manufacturing industry, in an organized form, has hardly begun to show itself; commerce has has hardly begun to sliow itself; commerce has vacated this part of the peninsula. Only one short railroad, from Modena to Bologna, has been built, as if men feared the neigh of the iron steed would startle dead heroes from their sleep of ages and bring them up to shame the living.

The exarchate of Revenna was given to the Pope by Pepin of France as early as 755, and the deed was confirmed by Charlemagne; but it took as many years additional to evercome the resistance of the people and confirm the Pontifical authority over them. At last Pope Alexander VI. commissioned his son, Cesar Borgia, to conquer the country. His success was accomplished by using all the arts of intrigue, treachery and force them in possession of the Roman court, and was followed by his receiving the title of Doke of the Romans.—In the following reign (Julius H.) it was regulary annexed to the Pontifical states, together with the other Legations of Porli, Ferrara and Bologna. Ecclesiastical bigotry completed what faction had begun, and this part of Italy almost sank out of sight for centuries, until it was stirred to new life by the French invasions of 1797 and 1801, in the latter of which it was taken from the Pope and handed over to the The exarchate of Revenue was given to the taken from the Pope and handed over to the Cisalpine Republic, to be incorporated after-wards in the Napo conic Kingd an of Italy.

wards in the Napo conie Kingd sn of Italy.

The four provinces already named, toge her with three others in a different part of the Pope's dominion, are styled Legations, because the local government is administered by a Legate, while the remaining provinces, governed by Delegates, are termed Delegations. The former, adjoining Austria's dominions on the Po, have long afforded that power an opportunity as well as a pretex: for interfering in Italian affairs, and in a measure distaining the policy of its rulers. By the treaty of Vienna, Austria might, if judged necessary, garrison the city of Ferrara as well as Piacetaxs; but she was not allowed to construct additional fortifications in either. So frequently and persistenly did she either. So frequently and persistenly did she thus interfere, that Louis Philippe, shortly after his accession to the French throne, ocafter his accession to the French throne, oc-cupied the port of Ansona with a body of groups for six years, until every Austrian soldier had abandoned the Papal territory. But in 1847, when the present Pope began to introduce im-portant reforms, the Austrians once more cross-ed the boundary and occupied Ferrara, threst-ening to march to the city of R me unless his Holiness ceased to identify himself with the progressive party. The Pope consented and obeyed; but the people of Bologna unfurled the standard of revolt, defeated Weiden, the impe-rialist General, and only succumbed in 1840.

tually weakened their main body, consumed valuable time, and enabled the allies to drive them precipitately from the Lomellina and the Romagna. The events which have since occurred—the revolutions in the Duchies and the Miscellaneous. Legations, the disposition manifested to unite with Sardinia, the peoceful organization of a new government, the Perugia massace—have demonstrated both the desire and fitness of the Italian people for a degree of liberty, and the unfitness of their former rulers for situations of power and trust. In proposing to get rid of thom and the Pope together, Napoleon is sim-Evenday. For Gentlemen—Smithy from 5 to 12. M., 8 to all other days from 1 to 2 o'clock P. He is but brushing off the cobwebs which have been spun from pillar to pillar in the Temple of Liberty. What his motives may be we know not and care little. But his policy towards Italy has combined the boldness, the decision, the rapidity of his uncle, with the diplomatic astuteness of the Roman court. Is it any wonder that its leading spirits should boil over with rage at the manner in which they have been foiled! They have been defeated with their own weapons, and the Romagna is irretrievably lost. Latest accounts represent that the flame of revolution had spread to the March of Ancona, and that the Swiss troops in March of Ancona, and that the Swiss troops in the Pope's pay, at Macerata, had been attack-
